Midwest Center for Occupational Health and Safety (MCOHS) Seminar

LEARNING TO TEACH: CREATING IMPACTFUL PRESENTATIONS

MCOHS

Putting together presentations, be it for a class, a community audience or your scholarly colleagues, is no easy task.

Join MCOHS for a special presentation by Dr. Mitch Rosen, Director of the Center for Public Health Workforce Development and Deputy Director of the New York and New Jersey Education Research Center. He will share tips of the trade and engage in meaningful conversation about the best practices in teaching for impact.

Friday October 28

9:00 - 11:00 a.m.

IN PERSON

Health Sciences Ed Ctr
2-101AB

If unable to attend in person, you can join via Zoom:

z.umn.edu/mcohs-rosen

Mitchel A. Rosen, PhD

Director, Center for Public Health Workforce Development;

Deputy Director, NJ/NY Occupational Safety and Health Center;

Associate Professor, Department of Urban-Global Public Health, Rutgers School of Public Health

Dr. Rosen has managed the training of over 750,000 workers in occupational safety and health, environmental health, and public health education. He develops capacity for vulnerable populations to provide safety and health education in their native language.

Dr. Rosen focuses his research on the impact of training on workplace practice. His work empowers workers and community members to make informed decisions about safety and health issues.

mcohs.umn.edu

MCOHS is funded, in part, by the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health.

SCHOOL OF PUBLIC HEALTH
UNIVERSITY OF MINNESOTA